walking in
shrinking
territories

IV edition of the SUMMER SCHOOL of Laboratorio del Cammino

What metamorphoses affect the industrial spaces in the areas of Biella and Ivrea? In front of the current global climate crisis, what responses emerge from the shrinking territories and what trajectories for urban planning and design? And to what extent the walk and the direct and bodily experience of places can represent a privileged angle for grasping the dynamics of shrinkage, the processes of transformation, the temporary uses and the incremental reoccupation of industrial and housing spaces?

RecycLand is the IV edition of the walking Summer School promoted by the Laboratorio del Cammino (LdC), an inter-university network of researchers that develops innovative teaching activities aimed at exploring the methodological contribution of walking in urban planning and design. The Summer School will take place in August-September 2021, will cross the territory between Biella, Ivrea and Turin by walking and will investigate the relationship between territory and production.

The goal of the Summer School is to understand to what extent the "walking through", the sight, the listening and the slow crossing of places, are essential ways to read and investigate the ongoing phenomena of shrinkage. In particular, supervised by teachers, researchers and artists who work closely with the territory and its transformations, students will be guided to research and describe the metamorphosis of industrial spaces and recognize the challenges posed by climate change.
